Answers and Explanations

1) C

To figure out what the missing word is, try to predict its definition by using key words from the prompt. In this prompt, the key words are “idle chitchat,” which the prompt describes as something “Richard loathed.” The missing word likewise describes something he loathed or “hated,” namely the fact that his job required whatever the missing word describes. Thus the missing word must also mean chitchat. Choice (C) is correct, as palaver means prolonged idle talk or chitchat.

(A) is not correct because inanity is foolishness or insignificance. While “idle chitchat” could be described as “inanity,” this word is still not the best choice. Inanity is not necessarily related to talking or speech in the way that choice (C)’s word is.

(B) is not correct because flattery is insincere praise. Though “chitchat” could involve flattery, the prompt does not specify that it does in this case.

(D) is not correct because rapprochement is an establishment of cordial or harmonious relations. “Chitchat” does not necessarily require or establish such relations.

(E) is not correct because candor is frankness or honesty in speech, though “chitchat” does not necessarily require any such frankness.

2) D

To figure out what the missing words are, try to predict their definition by using key words from the prompt. In this prompt, the key words can be used to predict the relationship between the missing words. The key words here are “sentence,” “such,” and “rulings.” The sentence in this question is synonymous with the judge’s ruling, so both missing words describe the same thing. Moreover, the inclusion of the modifier “such” in front of the second missing word makes it clear the two missing words describe the same thing. Thus, the correct answer must provide a pair of synonyms. Choice (D) is correct, since it is the only answer choice that provides synonyms: arbitrary means contingent on one’s discretion or judgment, and discretionary also means subject to one’s own discretion or judgment.

(A) is not correct because the two words are not synonymous with each other. Capricious means erratic, while judicious means sensible. If anything, these words are antonyms, though the prompt requires synonyms.

(B) is not correct because the two words are not synonymous with each other. Facultative means left to one person’s choice, while equitable means fair. However, a facultative sentence is not necessarily fair. Additionally, the prompt suggests that the “sentence” was indeed unfair.

(C) is not correct because the two words are not synonymous with each other. Dispassionate means devoid of bias, while partisan means partial to one side. Thus, these words are antonyms, though the prompt requires synonyms.

(E) is not correct because the two words are not synonymous with each other. Objective means impartial, while prejudicial means related to a preconceived bias. Thus, these words are antonyms, though the prompt requires synonyms.

3) E

To figure out what the missing word is, try to predict its definition by using key words from the prompt. We know that the student's behavior was "so reprehensible," which means it was bad. We also know that, although the teacher disliked having to do it, she had no other choice but to react to such behavior. Out of the choices provided, the only logical reaction for a teacher to have involves scolding the student. The missing word must likewise mean to scold, so choice (E) is correct, since objurgate means berate sharply.

(A) is not correct because expostulate means reason earnestly against an action or intention of another person. Thus, it correctly implies that the student has misbehaved, but it is not strong enough to work in context. Expostulating is talking earnestly, not scolding.

(B) is not correct because vituperate means address with harsh language, which is close in meaning to "scold." However, vituperate does not have anything to do with punishment, so it is not the strongest answer choice.

(C) is not correct because venerate means revere, the very opposite of what the teacher had to do the child whose behavior was "reprehensible."

(D) is not correct because obfuscate means confuse or obscure. This is not something a teacher would have to do to a child whose behavior was "reprehensible."

4) E

To figure out what the missing word is, try to predict its definition by using key words from the prompt. In this sentence, the key words are "lack of insight," a phrase used in place of the missing word in the final independent clause of the sentence. Thus, the missing word must also mean lack of insight, and so choice (E) is correct: purblind means lacking in insight or intelligence.

(A) is not correct because sagacious means shrewd or wise. This would not describe Tesla "when it came to business matters," since he had a "lack of insight" on the subject.

(B) is not correct because spendthrift means wastefully extravagant. Though the prompt does suggest that Tesla was not good with money, it does not say he was a reckless spender. The prompt actually implies that he did not make much money at all from his inventions.

(C) is not correct because tenebrous means dark or gloomy. As such, this word would not be used to describe someone's knowledge of "business matters," since one cannot logically have gloomy knowledge.

(D) is not correct because prodigal means wastefully extravagant or lavish. Though the prompt does suggest that Tesla was not good with money, it does not say he was a reckless spender. Instead, the prompt actually implies that he did not make much money at all from his inventions.

5) C

To figure out what the missing word is, try to predict its definition by using key words from the prompt. The key words in this sentence are found in the "adage": "good things come to those who wait." Dana "believed in" that adage, and the missing word describes what she "practiced" as a result. One who believed in the adage would be likely to practice patience, so the missing word must mean patience. Choice (B) is the best choice, since forbearance means patience or restraint.

(A) is not correct because diligence means persistence. However, the adage in the prompt relates to patience, not persistence. These two qualities do not necessarily mean the same thing.

(C) is not correct because haste means unnecessarily quick action, the very opposite of what Dana would practice as a believer in the importance of patience.

(D) is not correct because prudence means good judgment or reasoning. However, the adage in the prompt relates to patience, not reason. These two qualities do not necessarily mean the same thing.

(E) is not correct because fortitude means mental strength in facing temptation. Though resisting temptation can involve a type of patience, this word has too specific of a meaning to work in context.

6) B

To figure out what the missing word is, try to predict its definition by using key words from the prompt. In this prompt, the key word is "ancient," which is used to describe both the uncle and his Border Collie. The missing word also describes the Border Collie, so it must also mean ancient or old. Choice (A) is, therefore, the correct answer, since hoary means very old.

(B) is not correct because obsolete means no longer in use. Though old things are often obsolete, this word does not work as well in context as does choice (A). One does not usually refer to living creatures as obsolete.

(C) is not correct because sprightly means animated or lively. As such, this word would be more likely to describe a Border Collie that was young, not one that “seemed ancient.”

(D) is not correct because archaic means marked by the characteristics of an earlier time period. However, a Border Collie could not literally be archaic unless it had some characteristic of an earlier, more primitive species. This word does not work in context because archaic is not quite synonymous with old or ancient.

(E) is not correct because primordial means original. Even though the uncle’s Border Collie was old, it was probably not the first or original member of that particular dog breed. Primordial does not have the same meaning as ancient or old and, thus, does not work in place of the missing word.
